Last weekend we indulged in one of our favorite guilty pastimes—karaoke. Really, really bad karaoke—involving lots and lots of alcohol. The kind where no one in the room even comes close to hitting anything resembling a note. In short, it was awesome.

There was a whole cast of characters there that had us rolling with laughter all night long. Among our favorites: the drunken stoner who got up to sing “Because I Got High,” complete with assistance from a smoke machine, and the May-December couple who sang the wonderfully sappy “Faithfully” from Journey while gazing into each other’s eyes. Our boyfriend tried to hound us into singing the oldie “My Guy” (a bet we lost to him long ago), but lucky for us, it was too late for any more requests.

We did however, do a rockin’ version of Sheryl Crow’s “The First Cut Is the Deepest” and brought the house down—we swear. Next time, we are thinking either Barry White or Journey’s “Don’t Stop Believin’.” You know, the classics.

Seattle Picks:

1 Neighborhood Revival

As avid boutiquers, always in search of unique shops, friends have repeatedly suggested we visit Georgetown, the up-and-coming south Seattle neighborhood. But while we love love love Manny’s Pale Ale (of Georgetown Brewery fame), we were a little skeptical of the seemingly industrial neighborhood. Girls, were we wrong.

Revival Home & Garden is just one of the many new and hip spots popping up in the not so new (but definitely hip) Georgetown neighborhood. We loved their collection of modern furniture paired with Asian flair and vintage steals. They have great gifts for the home as well, like ginkgo serving spoons. And at the back of the shop, we found terrific garden buys for those with green thumbs, plus a sweet kids’ section with soft tees and our favorite This is Paris book by Miroslav Sasek.

We wish Revival Home & Garden had moved into our neighborhood, but in the meantime we will just have to keep going back to Georgetown—a neighborhood that we definitely love love love.
